

Sydney Fish Market is delighted to announce its fundraising cocktail event and auction raising cash

Among the generously donated items is a Ken Done sketch – exclusively created for the event – which takes inspiration from the oyster. Further, a year's supply of oysters – generously donated by The Morrison Bar & Oyster Room – is another auction item to tantalise the taste buds.

Overseeing The Morrison's kitchen is industry veteran, chef Sean Connolly. As one of Australia's most recognised and respected chefs, Sean will curate the night's delicious oyster fare. Of the event, Sean said: "The Morrison Bar & Oyster Room really is the home of the oyster for Sydney-siders, having sold 14 million oysters in the past seven years alone. It was really important for us to get involved in this event, giving back to the industry when it's in need of our support."

With proceedings overseen by honorary auctioneer, radio broadcaster, Ray Hadley, the event follows a recent fundraising auction held at Sydney Fish Market where over $23,000 was raised.

Australia's home of seafood, Sydney Fish Market is the largest market of its kind in the southern hemisphere, trading over 100 different species of seafood each day. Sydney Fish Market operates a wholesale auction and working fish market, hosting six seafood retailers offering Australia's biggest variety of fresh seafood.

More than just a location that trades seafood, the site is a leading tourism destination, showcasing the best in Australian produce to food lovers and seafood enthusiasts from across Australia and around the world. Visitors can experience the variety and quality of fresh and cooked local seafood
